Why do people track themselves?

Why do people track data?

„I can honestly say that anything that can be tracked is being tracked by someone somewhere.“

“A way of organizing, shaping, and „reading“ your own life.“

“Self-tracking is much broader than health. It is as big as our life itself.“

K. Kelly, The Inevitable, 2016

Why do people track intimate data?

- But what about intimate data?
- How can we track our relationship?
- Which data are perceived as intimate?

What data are perceived as intimate?

collected by Levy, 2014; Danaher et al., 2018; Lupton, 2015 a. 2016

The Life Course of Intimate Relationships

defined by Levy, 2014

A: Dating – Scoping out potential intimates

A: Dating – Scoping out potential intimates

- Data provided by using services (social networks)
- Data collected and shared by other users

Tinder collects data about:

- Facebook likes
- Information about education
- Age-rank of matches
- When and where every online conversation with matched happens
- Interests and jobs
- Pictures (Instagram)
- Sexual preferences

- Facebook stalking
- Google someone

Levy, 2014

A: Dating – Scoping out potential intimates

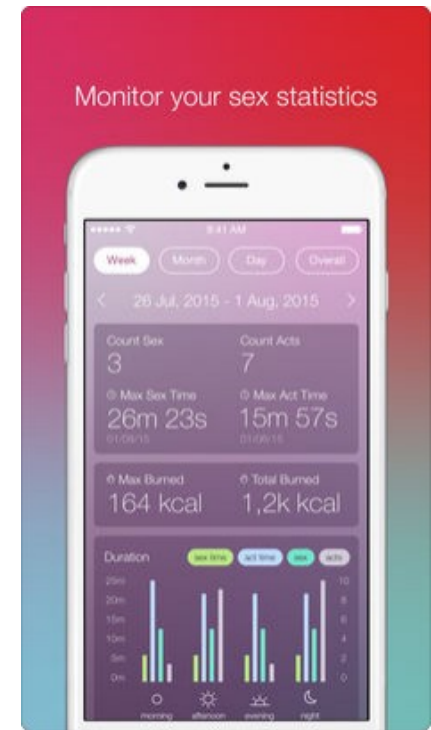

- Users disclosed information quickly to strangers
- Most published data were personal data: full name, date of birth, phone numbers, work detail, email-addresses, complete home address

Nandwani et al., 2018

B: Tracking Intimate and Romantic Practices

- Intimate tracking
- Intimate Gamification
- wearable sex toy → Lovely
- wearable devices → kGoal
- application for tracking → SexTracker

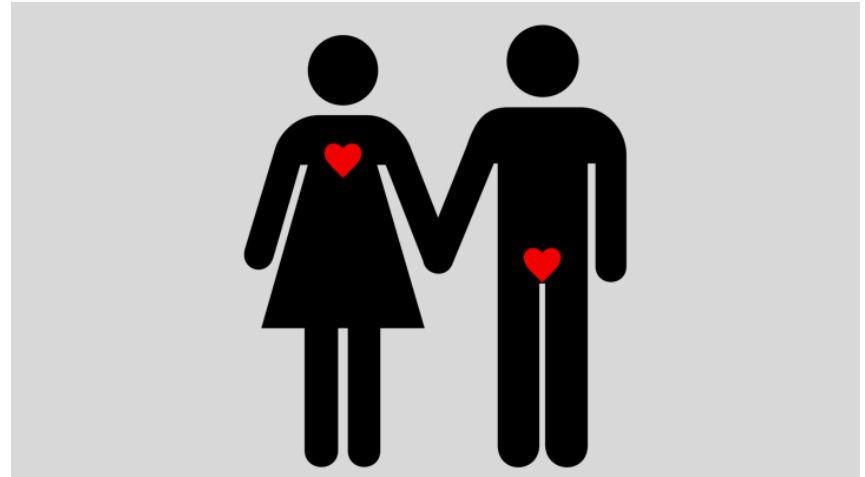

Danaher et al., 2018

B: Tracking Intimate and Romantic Practices

Risks that may arise:

- Really intimate data stored on servers
- Not always guaranteed that the data is anonymous
- Data can be resold
- Automatic recording by application
- Quantification of act, similar to a sport activity
- Supports gender stereotypes

C: Monitoring Fertility

- These types of data make woman to an object of surveillance and quantification
- Gives the impression that the cycle of a woman is unsupervised chaotic
- Promote the enhancement of gender stereotypes

D: Surveillance, Abuse and Revenge

- Surveillance through location-based tracking
- People track their location with the partner, family and friends
- Urge for control
- Does location tracking corrode the love in a relationship?

D: Surveillance, Abuse and Revenge

- Technologies can be misused for other purposes
- People exploit technologies to intimidate, threaten, monitor or harass the partner, ex-partner...
- usual security measures are often not enough in this case

Risks?

Quantification

- Risk of losing the reference to the data
- User should be aware of purpose

Trust

- Focus can be solely on data
- Trust can be lost

Privacy

- Privacy is important and should not be forgotten
- Interpersonal issues also play a role

Conclusion

- Intimate data arise predominantly from intimate activities.
- View of which data is intimate can change, depending on circumstances.
- What is intimate is partially perceived subjectively.
- Love and Relationships are influenced by the internet and self-optimization.
